Trauma-sensitive school cultures, with appropriate individual supports, can be a pathway to inclusion and success for all students. This presentation will focus on why we need trauma-sensitive schools, what they look like, how we can create them, and how this work dovetails with the special education and IEP process.

Results from the Trauma-Sensitive Schools Descriptive Study will be shared. Lessons learned to date, implications and practical tips for special education, and challenges and opportunities for the future will be discussed.
